

How is SACCCS working with local communities and other key stakeholders?

South African Centre for Carbon Capture and Storage (SACCCS) has embarked on intensive public engagement which will extensively consult with the local community to raise awareness about CCS, to understand their views and integrate their comments into the project. There will be regular updates to the community and SACCCS will offer detailed briefings to interested parties. This involves actively maintaining dialogue with stakeholders – such as environmental institutes, NGOs, industry and community bodies, academics, regulators, Government and the general public– and working with them to incorporate their views and inputs.
